This sex education movie explores the topics of body development, sexual hygiene, masturbation, menstruation, puberty, sex and childbirth. Warhol's paintings illustrate classes at the School of Fine Arts in Paris. An Untidy History of Sexuality, published in 1985 in Hustler magazine, tells how the American abstract painter Paul Stewart, who lived in Paris in the 1970s, met the French psychoanalyst Jean-Paul Sartre. Aesthetics of antiquity, renaissance, baroque, baroque and classicism permeate the picture, in which the obsession with forms is combined with an understanding and reverence for nature. It was during this period, in 1976, that Warhol participated in the Playboy Club exhibition of the young generation of feminists, held in New York. In the fall of 2008, Paul Stewart filed a New York court with a demand to protect his honor and dignity from criticism, slander and intentional insults that discredit him, as well as to recover compensation for moral damage in the amount of 527 thousand dollars. One of the demands was that the painting, which depicts a naked woman, be filmed on television screens in France and Belgium. According to Stewart, the film "Soft Skin" criticized the values of his philosophy, and the images of some of the works were offensive. The dispute revolves around the ownership of the image of a naked woman. The court concluded that at the time of filing the lawsuit in April 2008, the installation was still considered the property of the artist, having been published before the lawsuit was filed. Many galleries refused to distribute the painting, believing that it was not their property. However, the London gallery "Fund Lydia and Robert" spoke out in favor of recognizing the installation as their property. Subsequently, the gallery stated that it does not consider or recognize claims to other people's property. "Soft Skin" contains stunning color and light transitions and represents a new stage in art aimed at enhancing the sense of self-expression at various stages of life and the male and female body. The London Gallery, which currently has 25,000 images of Delicate Skin without the consent of the author, has no rights to them. Conclusion This is just a summary and does not constitute a complete overview of the subject matter of this report. I have not made a multi-volume encyclopedia out of it, and therefore do not venture to announce it. I tried a few thought experiments and tried to identify cases, but even at best it would take several volumes. I've only expanded on some of the questions, but I didn't expect anyone to try to use the issue as a model situation. The most important question is how I reacted to my first crush. Fortunately, I found a lot of information about her the very moment I found out about it. I knew it couldn't be an isolated episode, but I didn't know how it affected my future. I was young, I had a break, probably a few years, before I met that girl again, and then I met the woman with whom I had a child. For me, these were the most important moments in my life. Much of this material is related to my current professional activities. I realized that most people who are sexually active don't see it as an adventure. I often hear people say "I want to be an adult". I understand it. But on the other hand, what does it mean to be an adult? I have a constant thirst to know who I am and who I want to be in order to be myself. And then I realize how much I have to understand and how much I need to know for this. I have to know how to be a man, how to perceive myself as a man. I learn what it means to have an orgasm. I am beginning to respect myself, and I should be as pleased with myself as I am with other people. This ultimately leads me to what I consider to be preparation for adulthood. And I have to start doing it. It starts in childhood. In this work, I do not want to give any ready-made recipes that could be applicable to everyone. Sex life itself is very individual. Therefore, I would like to illustrate the main points with the most common examples. Most of the things I have discussed with children have to do with how they choose their partners. I advise them to consider how this affects their future, especially family life. I recommend them to think about what they see
