is likely to concede the Conservative Party leadership next month if he fails to beat favourite Jeremy Hunt in a race to become the country's next prime minister, the former foreign secretary has suggested. During a candid interview with The Sunday Times, Mr Rory suggested "one of us has got to go" at the Tory leadership contest on June 23, and added that other candidates such as former education secretary Nicky Morgan and outgoing justice minister Caroline Dinenage could also face being replaced. The comments come as much as a week after the BBC reported that Mr Rory had resigned from the cabinet in order to campaign for the top job. A No10 source told The Sunday Times that as it was “impossible to re-interpret” what Mr Rory had told journalists earlier this month, it was “obvious” that he was talking in the context of the leadership contest. Conservative leadership contenders Mr Hunt, Theresa May and Rory Stewart are vying to take on Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn in an election this summer. Mr Rory is considered by some to be Mr Hunt's main challenger and is seen as a supporter of the Prime Minister who wants to pursue a more moderate course under her leadership. Mr Rory has made no secret of the fact that he cannot be seen as a supporter of Mr Hunt, who was the health secretary in Mr Cameron's government, and not for the first time he has hinted at the possibility of standing down. In the interview, he said: "I'm in a funny position. I've got a lot of support but no one is yet willing to join me.

We'll see what happens. "If I get a massive vote I'll probably go, and if I don't win I won't. But I'm not someone who is going to hold myself back. I'm being ambitious for my country. I'm not going to hold myself back. "I'm not going to stand in the way of someone who could offer to stand up for people on the right of the party. I can't wait to see if my judgement is right. If I get
