The group, which included Bank of Israel President Prof. Stanley Fischer and Bank of Palestine President Michel Khater, was scheduled to meet with the Ministry of Finance, but members of the group instead received an urgent phone call that their clients might lose their money. The meeting was initiated by Bank of Israel and Bank of Palestine CEOs Shlomi Khalag and Eyal Wainerstein, respectively. It was attended by Paul Mezirow, Chief Administrator of the Ministry of Finance; Bank of Israel Executive Vice President Yaakov Weisse; Bank of Palestine Executive Vice President Shmuel Blum; Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein; Bank of Israel and Bank of Palestine Legal and Regulatory Director Benjamin Kedar; and senior representatives of the two banks' government agencies. The group discussed the possibility of suspending international transfers by the two banks to their Palestinian clients due to the liquidation of their accounts, but the issue did not emerge as a major concern. The hope is that the Israeli government will help mitigate any potential losses for these Palestinian banks by extending the validity of their Israel licenses. The meeting was the first time Palestinian businessmen and banks representatives have met with officials about these issues. Palestinian sources were not impressed by the meeting, complaining that the meeting could not have been conducted in a more state-sponsored manner.
