This may be the reason why it is not a common choice in the field of robotics and manufacturing. Yet, it seems to be a silver bullet for many industries. In other words, when you chat with robot you will hardly come across a robot which doesn't use a software. It might be a bot that helps in initiating a conversation. It might be the one that sends the messages when your network is weak. There is a simple reason why you need to use a robot in your manufacturing line. The working space, time, and costs might be small, even smaller when compared to the big machine, yet these small manufacturing units have a huge potential to reduce the production time. In fact, when you use such tools and software, you can even make a better product. Even a one-story building can be considered when it comes to home robots. In such a place, you will have to see the advantages and disadvantages. a. Easy to operate: The size of the machinery makes it easy to operate and maintain. Robots have made manufacturing a lot simpler. They are easy to assemble and can be assembled in a factory or at home. You can even build a completely assembled robotic mechanism at home. b. Intelligent and versatile: A few years back, robot was just a mechanism. Now they can operate as a customer service agent. In retail they will help you in basket inventory management. You can use them for wrapping the products, searching for the product and price, lifting or even traveling. They are intelligent enough to do both indoor and outdoor tasks. c. User friendly: Robots are user friendly. You can teach them tricks like picking, cleaning, and assembling. All you need to do is to connect a computer to the robotic mechanism. d e24f408de9
