Q: How to incorporate liquid in a tea I am brewing iced tea. I put some hot water in a teapot and put a couple teaspoons of leaves in a strainer in the water. I think you're supposed to do it that way? How do I incorporate the liquid part of the liquid tea to my leaves, i.e.: milk, cream, chocolate syrup etc? A: As long as it's just hot water and tea leaves, the amount of liquid added is up to you. It will depend on how you prefer your tea. You can add milk, cream, or chocolate syrup for flavoring. You can add lemon to an iced tea to get a fruity sweet tea. You can also add citric acid to keep the tea from going flat. As with any tea, you can add whatever flavorings you prefer to your tea. The most commonly used ones are: Milk: this will give it a "creaminess", if you prefer it Chocolate syrup: gives it a bit of chocolate flavor. Citric Acid: gives the tea a nice sourness. You can find it fairly cheap as a grocery store item. Use about 2 - 3 teaspoons (about 10 - 15mls) per 10oz (about 288ml) bag of tea. Lemon: sweet and sour flavor, adds a bit of fizz to your tea. You can find it at the grocery store (usually in the refrigerated section of the produce section).
