Maine to end funding for Obamacare exchange AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Maine is ending the last of its funding for the state's health insurance exchange. The state Health and Human Services Department says the exchange is now operating under a fiscal emergency and will shut down the next day at 6 p.m. Monday. It says lawmakers are expected to approve more funding next week. Maine's exchange is the only one in the country that primarily covers Medicaid recipients. The federal government is providing $1.3 billion in federal funds to Maine's exchange, which has enrolled more than 36,000 people in private plans. Maine's exchange has been plagued by problems since its implementation, such as software glitches and delays in processing applications. The exchange is run by a private company called New England HealthChoice, and a DHHS spokesman says state officials were aware that some performance issues had arisen and that the company had been working on a fix. A team of a dozen researchers at the University of Iowa are working to create a fully sustainable, self-replicating system that would produce food, biofuels and medicine while also cleaning the air and converting waste into fertilizer. They believe that with the right modifications and advances, it is possible to create a sustainable self-replicating system that can generate food and biofuels, as well as clean up the atmosphere and convert waste into fertilizer. The research team plans to begin developing the system next year and hopes that a decade from now, the technology would be on the verge of commercial use. "It may take another 10 years to develop the technology, but we're pretty optimistic," said David Lewis, a professor at the UI's Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry and one of the developers of the technology. The team, dubbed "Rise," is part of a larger Iowa initiative called the Human Systems Integration Group and is one of several toiling to develop self-sustaining nanotechnology in the Midwest. They are also the only Iowa team to be granted a $1
