Note: The term 'Citation' is used to refer to a reference in the present disclosure and refers to one or more references. Web pages on the internet are important sites for gathering information on today's technology trends and consumer research. When searching for innovations in a particular field, people often need to verify the reliability of the sites they are visiting. This is done by citing the sites, which can be found in the pages in question. For instance, one web page may contain a citation of another web page, which can support a claim made on the original page. By way of example, citation sources can provide information about the resources that the original page cites. A citation source for a particular subject may be indicated by a small number of dots in the text. By clicking on the dots, the citation source can be brought to the forefront. One of the challenges in using sites found on the internet is establishing credibility for the sites to make sure that the source itself is trustworthy. The credibility of a site can be established by its content, or by referring to one of its other resources. For instance, the credibility of a source cited can be established by referring to its web site that includes the content that the source provides. Another way to establish credibility is to link to the source's other content, or to make other references to its site. A citation source can serve to establish credibility in two ways. First, a citation source can point people to a trustworthy web site that can reinforce the credibility of the citation source. Second, a citation source can provide the means to access the content that is being cited. The above-described content can serve the beneficial purpose of reinforcing the credibility of the content that it cites. There is a need, however, for a content solution that makes it easier to access content that may reinforce the credibility of a citation source. References to the prior art are provided in the "References" section of this disclosure. Many people believe that it is as easy to create a legitimate, business-like website as it is to create a "hobby" site. A properly-conceived website can make people feel that the enterprise referenced by the website is trustworthy, and that the enterprise is credible. The credibility of a business can be established by the product that it offers or the services that it provides, and by the manner in which the enterprise operates. Many businesses do not use conventional means to establish and enhance their credibility. Often, some aspects of a business's operation may not

We've got self-cleaning carpets, self-cleaning windows, self-filling lamps and self-cleaning walls. Another 5 years and we'll have self-cleaning surfaces. The next step is clothing. We'll be able to clean our own clothes. Possibly even drink our own coffee. And as the Internet of Things continues to blossom, we'll find that there are few limits as to how much we can talk to and control our homes remotely. The most amazing example I've seen recently is Alex Kort from Revolv. For him, the possibilities are endless. He can control his home from his mobile device. You can turn off the lights, update the firmware for the lights, control them from anywhere. It's all there and all controllable. This is amazing. That's why I'm telling you about it. This report describes the ultrastructural analysis of Borrelia hermsii in baboons (Papio cynocephalus ursinus) with emphasis on the pathogen's developmental phases in the host cell. The morula contains dividing and non-dividing spirochetes. This is the first description of spirochetes of borreliae in the morula stage within the baboon. The morula may play an important role in the survival and pathogenicity of spiro
