Zero-energy states in open quantum dots connected to superconductors. The collective-mode spectrum of a single quantum dot connected to source and drain leads is calculated for a zero-area, top-gated quantum dot. The dipole-dipole-type interaction between the dot and the leads is taken into account. The spectrum is characterized by split-off resonances, each of which carries current only to the source but the total current coming from the split-off states and the inelastic partial current are exactly zero, leading to zero energy in the electrochemical potential. When the quantum dot area is finite, the energy of a split-off state remains exactly zero at large magnetic fields and large transmissions. March has been a month of uncertainty when it comes to the Timberwolves this season. At the beginning of the month, the team had shrugged off a 6-11 start to the season with a trip to the Midwest nice for both Karl-Anthony Towns and Jimmy Butler. However, an ugly 3-15 stretch to start the month caused Minnesota to pull back a bit and keep their fingers crossed that the team's recent troubles run cold the rest of the season. At that point, it seemed inevitable that the Wolves would head into the All-Star break a must win to salvage any sort of salvageable season. Then Minnesota found themselves in St. Louis yet again. After squandering the chance to take control of their own destiny on the road
