GAMEPLAY The next-generation of player movement and ball control has been implemented in FIFA 22. Players now react to their environment. It's no longer possible to simply walk through a defender and put yourself in a position to score a goal or set up a play. They know when they are being pressured and will shift to the gaps in the opposition defence or run off the ball instead. Players now stop in place better and reach more with long passes, and the ball reacts to the player and the friction of the surface. Players are now more agile and intelligent. They can dodge the ball or outmaneuver opponents in 1v1 situations and will choose their next move based on their situation and how they get there. Players also react better to contact with other players and the ball – they will speed up, change their direction or sprint. A more realistic game atmosphere has also been added, with crowd noises, celebrations and chants. Defensive play has been improved. Players now defend with their feet first, run backwards, close down the ball with challenges, and anticipate the ball better in 1v1 situations. Movements from player to player have also been improved. Accessibility has also been increased. Tight tackles, which would otherwise be considered too harsh, now take more careful aim to ensure players' safety. The ball will also fade less when players fall to the ground. There is now in-depth control over the player's artificial intelligence in all 3rd Person shooting. This is the result of new physics tech and has been designed to ensure that even novice players can master the ball control required to score. Every player has a different strength and style. The AI can also react to opponents and adapt to their strengths. They are realistic, recognising how the defenders around them are trying to attack and block the ball, switching to the appropriate style of play. The Ball X-Factor is now more accessible. After the initial presses and pushes during set-piece plays, pressing an opponent at a specific distance – or at the right angle and right speed – will change the ball's trajectory and outcome. Passing is now more accurate. Passes can be executed with

Gamer_007 7th February 2016 As a gamer, I feel FIFA is a gamer's game and something that should have been made before Call of Duty and the similar games. It is a game that could be played by anyone regardless of their skill or knowledge of football. This game caters to the general gamer and should be played by the masses. There is no hidden menus or modes to access or anything. The game is easy to get to grips with and anyone can start playing. I started with none of the prior knowledge of football and I've been learning and understanding the game for the past five days and have found that it is a good way to learn about the game. The controls are simple and straightforward and everything is point and click. There are menus which show the various aspects of the game such as attacking, defending and the Fifa Cup. All of the statistics are available and you can switch between goals scored, goals against and the Fifa cup. It is possible to play on your own which is a massive plus for a game that doesn't require any previous knowledge of football, except for the ability to dribble and pass. The levels of difficulty can be altered and I have found that they can be played on autoplay with the first level being the easy option, the levels can be advanced or the difficulty can be adjusted. The game has
