So say the default method of handling the click of a cell is like so: func tableView(tableView: UITableView, didSelectRowAtIndexPath indexPath: NSIndexPath) { // Here is where you perform whatever action let alert = UIAlertController(title: "Proceed With Security Check?", message: nil, preferredStyle:.Alert)

//... add action and add the alert self.presentViewController(alert, animated: true, completion: nil) }
...which is fine but in this case, I have a case where I want to display the same alert with a different functionality, like so: func tableView(tableView: UITableView, didSelectRowAtIndexPath indexPath:
NSIndexPath) { // Here is where you perform whatever action let alert = UIAlertController(title:
"Proceed With Security Check?", message: nil, preferredStyle:.Alert) alert.modalPresentationStyle =.Popover let action = UIAlertAction(title: "Don't Trust This Thing", style:.Default, handler: nil) alert.addAction(action) self.presentViewController(alert, animated: true, completion: nil) } So now, if the user taps OK on this alert, they are sent to the second view controller, but if the user taps Cancel, they are instead put back where they were...again, awesome. The problem is that I can't seem to figure out how to call a delegate that is connected to this popup so that I can do things like:
override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() // Possibly something that is connected to this viewController and tells it to "Do This" or "Don't Do That" } I can't seem to do something like: alert
