Without a doubt, Windows 7 introduces a number of improvements and new features over the previous Windows versions. One of the newest features that is making a lot of waves is called "Windows Snap". This feature is useful for dual monitor or multi-screen setups where the Windows application that you are working on can be placed right into the left or right monitor of your dual screen setup. The problem with the Windows Snap feature is that it is limited to 4 monitors. Moreover, if you are using Windows 7 in a single screen setup, there is no such feature to help you out. However, there is an application called FreeScreen Enhancer that can actually enhance the Windows 7 single screen mode to a dual monitor setup. We'll tell you more about this application in our in-depth review. When you move an application from a single monitor to a dual monitor setup, the screen is divided into equal regions, each region covering a single monitor. The region that you are currently in is called the active region. If you drag the application from a single screen to a dual screen setup, the active region will remain the same. So, how can you make the active region change? The answer to the question is to use FreeScreen Enhancer. The software allows the user to arrange the active region in any manner he or she wants. The available options are as follows: Set Top Left: This option lets the active region cross the middle of the screen. Set Top Right: The same as Set Top Left, except that instead of the active region crossing through the middle, it goes right across the screen. Set Bottom Left: The active region is placed at the bottom of the screen and not across the middle of the screen. Set Bottom Right: This option is the opposite of Set Bottom Left. Set Top: The active region is placed at the top of the screen. FreeScreen Enhancer - Free Screen Enhancer can be used to resize a single screen mode to a dual monitor mode. The application can also be used to draw a user interface on a single screen to the right or bottom of the screen. The same feature is available for dual monitor setups. Enhance the LCD monitor with the Windows snap functionality by changing to window locations on the screen at any time. This add-in comes with a range of features including: Window control. Arrange windows in Windows 7. Detect current screen resolution and enable support for multiple monitors
