Add the delicate symmetry of snowflakes and the ice-blue tracery of frost to your desktop. Due to this theme, you can permit snowflake and frost images to introduce you to the chilly beauty of winter. And then there were three What do you call three geeks from Guildford who become the world's first trio of full-time porn stars? A family, of course. They were recruited from the local council's ill-fated adult entertainment agency, which only resulted in the 24-year-old father, a welder, and two aspiring psychologists being taken on by the Dublin company that owns the world's oldest commercial porn site and specialises in group sex. After a couple of weeks, all three had been plying their trade at the Penthouse Video site for a measly €2,000 a day, with a fifth member of the team having meanwhile been added to their number in the form of one of the company's co-founders, a Dutch porn producer known only as Xtreme. The geeks - Kim, John and Sean - have now upped sticks to Ireland's capital, where the cult site has expanded to at least seven new premises. Roughly 20 new people - including teachers, hairdressers, salesmen and a prison guard - are in line to take up the offer to become paid porn stars. Kim, 31, from Whitchurch, Dorking, Surrey, has been two months in Ireland but already she's planning to move back to London and become a student. Her colleague John, 28, from Norton, Banbury, is well settled in Dublin and is currently expecting a girlfriend to join him soon. Sean is an IT technician who lives in his native Guildford with his dog. The porn business has always been a well-paid proposition. But the geeks have been paid the most basic of minimum wages. Their daily rations usually comes in at €2,000 - minus tax, of course. The deal is that the geeks must sign an agreement where they are promised nothing more than what they earn. "It's like any job," said the IT nerd. "You look at your contract and it says 'for all I know, I might be getting £150 a week'. But in actual fact, I might be only getting £75 a week. "I understand that. You've

After a demonstration, many opposition activists wanted to march in the July demonstration against this redevelopment project in the city centre. Brussels, 6 July 2017 - Three years ago, when it was first proposed, many protests against the future redesign of the city centre were anticipated. On 5 July 2017, about 1,200 Belgian citizens organized an alternative demonstration. This proposal was developed in order to make the bus station more accessible for people who don't want to use the station's current tunnel. A new underground motorway is also to be built, which is also a new link to the north of the city centre. People were not convinced in the beginning of the project. On 5 July, about 250 people formed the demonstration against this project and over the following days, around 100 people joined this demonstration. On the previous days, there were daily demonstrations, called by the different social movements, in which about 3,000 citizens joined to voice their opposition. The city centre was transformed

On the right side of the picture, you can see the area where the City Hall is located. After 15 years of construction work, many people were concerned about the construction of the new, pedestrianized square. They feared that the current city hall will be replaced by a glass office building. This square has been turned into a lively and pedestrianized square where visitors can enjoy the area with the city-centre restaurants. On the left side of the picture, you can see the public garden before and after the project. The garden has been completely redesigned to give the people a meeting point in the public space and access to the public garden is much easier than before the start of the project. “We didn’t come here
