This is a review from the future. DOA6 is set to release in just a few hours, and I'm now getting around to actually writing out a review. Okay, enough of the future, on with the review! This review, The Punisher: No Mercy. Punisher has mangled his hand after attempting to 'heal' himself with a plasma gun and tearing off his own face. I'll leave that at the end as an indication that this game starts out a little off with the silly concept that the antihero "the Punisher" has finally succeeded in reforming his so-called perfect crime-fighting image. Hooray. ... Wait... Game has already started. Wait... Game still hasn't started. Wait... Where is the fight? Wait... Where is the fight? This review is... Billed as a 1 vs. 1 Punisher Strike Team Mission, No Mercy is where Getaway and No Mercy, two rookie crime fighters, get to step up and do things their way with Bateman, Bohan, and... Frank. The bad guys are then forced to find out what exactly happened to the time skipping assassin that has Frank going through his own personal hell. Don't know what a Time Skip Time Skip Assassin is? I'll tell you about it later. The four playable characters only offer Frank's most well-known crime fighters, and is also the only "hidden" character. There is also a little "gimmick" to this title in that an "Infinity Redglare Haze" is given to the character that isn't Frank. That gives the player who plays Frank a reference and something extra to do... what, exactly is hard to say. The game still promises that the story will be kept truthful to the comics and that the only thing they won't tell you is which character the redglare on the screen belongs to.
