Q: Using connection.commit() to change columns in Oracle

How can I use connection.commit() to modify the columns in an existing Oracle table without using a select query? I have a form that submits and process a table with several columns. If one of the field needs to change the user needs to resubmit the form. If the field didn't change I don't want to have to resubmit the whole form.

Database: Oracle 11g

Table: PARAM_TEMP

Columns: PARAM_NUM

My goal is to change the value in PARAM_NUM to PARAM_NUM_ABC but have the system do it in the background without the user submitting the form. I want the system to go back to my processing form and change the value in PARAM_NUM without the user submitting the form. When I use update it only changes the value, doesn't change the existing column. I can use an insert that changes the column but it doesn't add the value to the record. When I use a select query the values appear in the new column (
