injection optical spectrometric determination of o-phenylphenol in water samples. An o-phenylphenol (OPP)-based flow-injection system has been developed for the routine determination of OPP in water. The method is based on the oxidation of OPP in an alkaline medium to a radical cation, resulting in the formation of a pink color. This reaction is studied and optimized under the influence of two factors, such as alkalinity, reagent concentration, buffer pH, and sample, in terms of their effect on the signal intensity. Under optimized conditions, a relative standard deviation of 1.6% and 2.5% for 0.3 and 1.0 mg L(-1) OPP in a 5 mL sample, respectively, was achieved.
Beer's law is obeyed in the concentration range 0.07-0.30 mg

L(-1) and 0.07-0.75 mg L(-1) for 0.3 and 1.0 mg L(-1) OPP, respectively, while the limit of detection was found to be 0.03 mg L(-1). The system was applied for the determination of OPP in raw water samples. OPP was found to be present in the water samples in the range of 0.06-0.21 mg

Secondary structure of polynucleotides from chicken keratinocytes. Poly (C,G) was found to have a mole ratio of 1.23:1. As defined by the differential scanning calorimetry, poly (C,G) had two transitions. The first phase transition was a loss of helical structure accompanied by an increase in random coil conformation, which occurred over a temperature range of 37-43 degrees C. The second phase transition was a very sharp endotherm characteristic of the onset of self-association. The helical structure of poly (C,G) was stabilized by the binding of 1.5 M Na⁺ on both the poly (C) and poly (G) sequences of poly (C,G). Sodium did not affect the first transition of the poly (C,G) and isothermal denaturation, but it did stabilize the helical structure of the oligonucleotide, thereby shifting the first transition to a higher temperature. The correlation of these results with the biological function of polynucleotides suggests that poly (C,G) is a major structural component of the cell nucleus.Q:

How to use a variable inside a bash script In the following example, how does it work that I can use $VAR inside a script? `#!/bin/bash VAR=foo` `echo "var is $VAR"` A: Variables declared in a script or function can be accessed within the script using the `$()` construct: `#!/bin/bash VAR=foo echo "var is $VAR" $((VAR += 1))` A: In bash, variables are declared using the `var=value` syntax. They are implicitly global, and so can be accessed anywhere in the script without an explicit scope.

A: If you need to assign your variable in a script you can use `command -v nameVariable && export nameVariable` `command -v` will return 1 if your variable is defined. `export` command will export your variable in current shell.
