STANBUL, Nov 2 (Reuters) - Turkish President Abdullah Gul backed the army's decision to respond to a series of suicide bombings which killed 55 civilians in a single day in January, the Hurriyet newspaper said on Wednesday, citing an interview published by private broadcaster NTV. The newspaper said the president backed the government decision taken by Prime Minister Tayyip Erdogan to withdraw the military from cities, and that it had nothing to do with the Turkish military's ceasefire with Kurdish rebels. "The AK Party government has been pretty successful in tackling the armed militants in Iraq, and we are doing our best to cleanse the region from terror groups," Gul was quoted as saying in the interview published on Tuesday. "Turkey is much closer to Iraq than Iraq is to Syria and the Middle East is quite a strategic place. We have a job to do in this region," he added.
