Yet Another Snake Game Features Key:

- Key Features:
  - Harriet is furious. Your family are all bed ridden, she tells you. Then she tells you she's found a button! She's sure to insist you help in the cause of Lord Button.
  - Get on with your life, says a curt Zebedee. But little Minnie insists on helping you look for the Button Witch. It may be hard work, but it will mean you're more likely to find it - or at least a reward for your efforts.
  - "It is a very valuable family treasure," says Harriet - of the Button Witch. You'd have to be daft not to help her find the treasure - and get the curse lifted from Aunt Abigail and Uncle Zebedee.
  - A story of witchcraft and alliances, the Button Witch is a fast-paced adventure with a mix of puzzles, fighting and hex-based magic.

  - Curses, hexes and a slow moving witch mean that the Button Witch can run in a variety of directions on both 2D and 3D maps. Your cursor moves but your character is locked to your view. You press on the correct spot and rotate around at your leisure. A pointer will indicate relative position and direction - all designed to keep you on-trouble-shooting. You can pause the game at any time to run through a list of possible actions.

-------------- Videogame-like gameplay! Local, cooperative survival action with 1-4 players. Play as cute low-poly animal kids. Tons of spooky enemies: Fight to survive against waves of enemies from your imagination like zombie Abe Lincoln your school's creepy lunch lady. Boss fights too! Every game is unique: Unlock 80+ weapons and superpowers as the game progresses. Become more powerful than you could ever imagine. Then get stomped to death by a giant foot. Have fun playing with your friends and family!-- Remember being a kid? Inspired by Calvin and Hobbes, Ed Edd & Eddy, and our childhood experiences, Neighborhorde aims to capture those countless hours spent imagining action movie scenarios. We miss the days of impromptu LAN parties with Halo, Mario Kart and the like, so we've designed Neighborhorde to have just the right amount of juicy nostalgia while also featuring hardcore gameplay that will test your friendships. Each night you'll unlock more of the 40+ crazy toys to add to your arsenal and become a more powerful team by choosing from 40+ game-changing superpowers. Break open presents found around the map to find the rad weapons you've chosen. Dash around as flames blast out from your feet with the new "Hot Feet" superpower you just picked. You think to yourself, "No baddie can stop me now!" However, as you get stronger, so does the horde of spooky enemies. As you progress you'll face a randomly-selected but ever-increasing combination of enemies including goop-tossing Lunch Ladies, magic-blasting Wizards, and axe-wielding Abe Lincolns. They're mean enough on their own, but mix these enemies together and they'll send you running home to Mommy. Survive 3 nights in a row, and you'll have to face your first of many epic boss fights. As you're bashed apart by the onslaught of baddies, you realize the only way to survive is the power of friendship; staying close to your team in the Friend Zone is the only way you'll regain your health. Since there are 80+ weapons and superpowers, and tons of enemies, no game is the same as the last and you'll always have a new strategy to try. Blast bottle rockets at evil dodgeballs. Blow a bubble-gum-shield to protect your team. Catch the incoming robots on fire with your hair dryer c9d1549cdd

US Army Air Corps Single Bullet 76mm for the Tiger! You will not believe your eyes or ears! A very lucky hombre bought a US Army Tiger Patch from an auction, and there is a single bullet inside. You will not believe your eyes or ears! A very lucky hombre bought a US Army Tiger Patch from an auction, and there is a single bullet inside. There are many versions of the Tiger, but in 1944 the British called the Tiger "the Rolls-Royce of the battlefield". It made a huge impression in England where it was seen as a solution to the urgent need to eliminate the problem of the devastating consequences of bombing attacks which were piercing the heart of London. In the field this tank, which normally weighed 43 tons, was able to move fast, climb steep gradients, swim rivers, and move over hot or icy terrain. Along with the Tiger, the RAF bombarded the enemy with rocket-propelled grenades, which destroyed a great number of Tigers, and other "Lilliputians" a hundred times smaller than the Tiger. Ironically, it was the decision to use the main guns of small Tiger-based tanks rather than the rocket launchers to bombard the enemy caused by the casting of the weight of shells onto the ammunition itself, which led to the quick disintegration and destruction of a large number of tanks. In the summer of 1944, the fighting around Prok Lake in Russia reached a unique level of confusion and the air war against the city of Kirov was intense. In mid-July, Tigers launched a surprise attack on Soviet forward positions in the forests near Lake Prok, driving the defenders away by artillery fire. With the territory in their sector being overrun, the exhausted and freezing Germans, who had previously suffered the losses of their comrades, were pushed in an incredible way to march through cold and dangerous no man's land several times. A desperate plea, "Save us from ourselves, keep us alive!" was spread over the telephone lines and messengers were sent to the headquarters of the Grand Duchy of Finland. Commanders of the Finnish 39th Brigade of the Red Army were asking for help and also requesting ammunition for the M-17 T-32 76mm tank guns. The order was ready to provide the requested resources immediately, but in a way that under the stated circumstances only one brigade could receive guns for action. The solution appeared natural; we would give small ammunition trucks with each 76mm gun and small ammunition
