They are a highly volatile group of people who always do the opposite of what the rest of us do. If everyone in a group of friends had this trait, friendships would be difficult. Luckily for us, most of the people we work with do not. I'd like to share a couple of stories with you. My husband is a seemingly calm and serene man with a beautiful family. He is also a man of keen intellect and more often than not, a straight shooter with a typical "no nonsense" style. He is also an introvert. When he is home, his quiet and "together" nature is a gift to our family. But when he has an extremely important phone call or other meeting, his inner calm will instantly evaporate and he will turn on "inner extrovert." He will stop listening to other people and become totally absorbed in whatever he is doing. I am simply not allowed to interrupt him for anything in the house. If he is out of the house, leaving a message is as good as having him home because he will be interrupted. He has told me that when he is about to do something that he thinks is important, he will go to his room, shut the door, and meditate. The last time I was home, I used our password to unlock his door and went to check on him. He was standing in his room, fully clothed, with his feet planted firmly on the ground. He had his hands behind his back and was humming a soft, peaceful tune. He told me he had been standing there meditating for about a half an hour. You see, he is prone to extreme mood swings. He will be the most calm and level-headed individual one moment and totally emotional the next. And within a few days, he will be back to being the same person who has been his home-base for so long. However, when he goes into "introvert mode," it lasts longer than in most of us. In fact, I have seen him in that mode for two days or more at a time. A few years ago, we had a very difficult time getting our young son to sleep. In the early years of his life, he would be up many hours in the night or not wanting to sleep at all. He would sleep for only a short time in the daytime. We tried to help him as much as we could with the sn

Product Description Action Anime is a popular platformer/shooter hybrid where it focuses on the shooting aspect of the title. The game is reminiscent of the Super Mario Bros. titles and uses a "pixels to pixels" method of gameplay. Players will jump over obstacles and fire enemies with a variety of weapons available such as a gun, a bullet gun, and even a projectile launcher. If an enemy comes onto the screen, a cursor is drawn around the screen and a crosshair pattern can be placed on the crosshair. When this occurs, players can hit the center of the crosshair and destroy whatever enemy is in the crosshair. This game offers three modes of play: Arcade, Story, and Gauntlets. Arcade is a practice mode, Story is a story mode, and Gauntlets is a competition mode. In Story mode, players can choose either a female or male character. The Arcade Mode is standard, while Gauntlets mode is a total mash-up of regular arcade and shooter conventions. Although the game isn't overly complicated, the game does boast eight weapons, which all have varying properties and a few obstacles to dodge. A typical segment of the game will include the player jumping on a giant flying pea, dodging a couple of robots, killing a few enemies, and eventually shooting a couple of enemies with a weapon.
