company policy." Another tweet read: "If you ever ate any Red

Vines, you should be tested for poisoning.” These messages were sent between June 2015 and November 2017. According to Tinz, the mother of the six victims was in a Burger King drive-thru near Palm Beach when the notes were written and left for her. She went to Palm Beach Fire Rescue with one note and told them it was her son and contained his name, an address and the words “Red Vine.” She also showed them an absence note that said “I’m done.” One of her young children wrote the note and she then took the note from her son’s lunch to the restaurant. The Burger King staff told the mother that they suspected the notes came from the kitchen and they were going to check on the employees. She, however, asked them to call 911 and the Palm Beach Police Department responded and interviewed her. Four employees were taken into custody – two were the manager and two were kitchen employees who wore red Vines polo shirts. All four were charged with criminal mischief. “Two of them were crying. We’re like ‘Why you writing this?’ they say ‘We didn’t do it,’” Tinz said. The manager, who was also a police officer, was charged with two counts of criminal mischief. The two employees at the Burger King were charged with three counts of criminal mischief. “One of them say ‘We didn’t do it. My co-worker did it,’” Tinz said. The manager said that her son, who was believed to be the author of the notes, told her that he made the notes on November 9, the same day the last note was written. Tinz said that after she had asked the manager why she was eating Red Vines and went to the hospital, the manager told her that the employees were writing the notes and that her son was not the

I will be arriving in London on 23 July and will leave on 9 August. I have two things to share here. I will be visiting London for the first time after 9 years. My colleague will be joining me in UK for the whole month. I will be taking my family to Germany for 2 days before returning to UK. I am not travelling for tourism. Hence, I don't need any visa for travel. My question is regarding visa for travel within UK. If I travel from Germany to UK, do I need any visa for travel? If not, then why? A: My question is regarding visa for travel within UK. You do not need a visa for
