You are trying to get the Id of a column that is of type Integer rather than Long as was the case with the first guery above. Dopamine is the most widely used catecholamine in cardiopulmonary support, but pharmacokinetic and disposition studies of dopamine are limited to low doses. Using a three-compartment model with bolus and continuous infusion pharmacokinetics, we determined the concentration, systemic clearance, steady-state volume of distribution, and elimination half-life of dopamine during cardiopulmonary support at a dose of 1,000 microg/kg/min. To further understand the pharmacokinetic disposition of dopamine during cardiopulmonary support, 13C-labeled dopamine with deuterium-labeled metabolites was administered at the same dose. High-performance liquid chromatography was used to quantify 13C-labeled and deuterium-labeled dopamine and metabolites. Plasma concentration of dopamine peaked at 3.6 +/- 1.3 microg/mL; total clearance of dopamine was 8.9 +/- 2.9 L/hr/m2; and steady-state volume of distribution was 1.6 +/- 0.3 L/kg. Renal clearance averaged 79.5 +/-19.4 L/hr/m2 and was reduced to 1.7 +/- 0.2 L/hr/m2 after 24 hours of dopamine infusion. Total clearance of dopamine was not different between patients who received dopamine infusion for 5 days and for 1 to 6 days. Metabolic clearance accounted for 29% +/- 7% of total clearance during infusion, increasing to 51% +/- 4% after 24 hours. The 13C-labeled dopamine was evenly distributed to brain, heart, liver, kidneys, lungs, spleen, and muscle, with the liver producing dopamine hydroxylase metabolites. Dopamine is rapidly cleared from the bloodstream. The observed rapid metabolism of dopamine suggests that the known toxicity of dopamine during cardiopulmonary support may not be related to catecholamine pharmacology." Foot and ankle injuries account for a high percentage of hospital admissions. The risk of wound infection and subsequent complications is clearly related to the state of the soft tissue after injury. This may have important implications for both patient management and cost containment. This article presents a brief review of soft tissue injuries and review of the use of thermography in evaluating soft tissue injuries. Q: How to find the number of substrings of length k in which all the characters in that string are distinct? I know a way to check for all the substrings of length k that contain all the distinct characters in a string. And I know a way of checking all the substrings of length k that contains any given character. But how can I combine them to find all the substrings of length k that contain all the distinct characters in a string, excluding the substrings where a character appears in multiple places? For example: For the string "abcd", let's check for all the substrings of length 2: ab bcd cda cd dab Here, a appears twice, so it doesn't qualify for
