Motion capture is more than the double-jumps, twists and turns of a professional footballer. It's the ballet of feet, head and body moving in complex patterns to acquire and execute every pass, every footwork, every dribble, every breath. It's the distinction between an average throw in FIFA and an accurate, flicked flick. There are more than 4,000 hours of real-life data collected on 22 high-intensity matches, each of which will be processed and calibrated. AI Fanatic has been on a mission since 2011 to understand how statistics and numerical analysis will transform football and what impact they will have on the game. The findings have led us to FIFA 22 where we have identified this is the best-fitting opportunity to introduce player statistics to Football Manager. There is no doubt that Player Statistics are the next big thing in Football. We have designed our Player Statistics to completely change how you view and understand Football. The data makes clear that, for the new Golden Era of Football to begin, changes will need to be made to the way Football is governed. That is why we have decided to develop these Player Statistics within the Electronic Arts (EA) FIFA product line. To work with all the new data, we have also set a new high standard for player accuracy by creating a data monitoring system that helps identify and correct any inaccuracies. This is also the first time in Football Manager history that any of these data attributes will be displayed on the player's face. We have perfected this data to bring forth a new era of Football Stats. The release of EA's FIFA 22 from the beginning of September will see the release of the most accurate data on players in the game, with 60% of the core data being generated by the game engine as opposed to using external data sources. This will be the first FIFA game since FIFA 16 that includes Player Statistics. Player Statistics is a new comprehensive set of player attributes that will be introduced to Football Manager players. We will share more information on player statistics in future articles. The new features will be introduced as part of upcoming Football Manager versions from version 19 onwards, and work will now start on the next version of Football Manager. We have started creating a new version of Football Manager where we have expanded the player engine to now cater for all the latest data attributes. At this time we have no plans for the new version to support Player Statistics, but will provide that functionality in
