Q: How to transfer data from ACK Cronos to Ito DC Gear Cal by means of a Java API I have an Ito DC Gear Cal with a serial port. I want to transfer data from the ACK Cronos (with an API) to the Ito Cal. I want to use the Ito Cal and not the ITO ACK software. I can see there is a Java API for the Ito software And a Java implementation of the ACK software I am looking for the Java implementation of the ACK to send sensor data to the Ito DC gear cal. How can I get started with

Currently, whenever I click on an xml file, the svn editor opens up. I want to open the xml inside the sub folder directly using the subclipse. In other words when I click on an xml file i want to be able to see the content of the xml file without having to open up the svn editor. A: In the Subclipse preference you need to go to "SVN Externals", and then click the "Add..." button. You will then be able to configure which folders you want Subclipse to try and open, and also which folder you are currently in. The subject matter of this disclosure relates generally to a pet feeding system including a container for storing water and wet food therein. It is a common problem in pet care that pets get water and food mixed together. While a pet bowl is designed to prevent water and food from mixing, pet bowls are not always easily accessible. For example, if a pet owner is not at home when their pet gets thirsty, the owner will often fill a pet bowl with tap water to soothe the pet. In that case, the pet is forced to eat only dry food from the bowl. The pet owner will then give the pet dry food from a second bowl (e.g., a bone) or take the pet outside to soil a kibble container in an effort to get the pet to eat the dry food.

Disposable food containers often do not provide sufficient liquid room to allow a pet to comfortably drink and eat dry food. Furthermore, disposable food containers often require a pet to lick them to remove the dried food therefrom. Pets do not like to lick. Proper drinking and eating are necessary to keep a pet healthy. However, the proper composition and amount of water and food in the pet's diet vary e79caf774b
