It is a good idea to back up your project before you update. Tuesday, April 19, 2012 My first (and so far only) sketchbook project, the A3 Sansei Heart Sketchbook. I started a sketchbook a few years ago and finally got around to using it! After a while, I've realised that the quality of paper in most sketchbooks isn't up to scratch, and instead of being a place to just rough it out on, I've started turning the sketchbook into a place to do some extra planning, and work some experiments. The A3 Sansei Heart sketchbook is part of a series that I started in 2011. The Sketchbooks are an A3 (33cm x 23cm) hardcover, spiral bound book with an A3 sketchbook on the inside and one page A4 (16.5cm x 11cm) spread per month. The paper in the sketchbooks is from the Cratchit Paper Company, a Japanese paper company founded in 1949. They create papers and papers for art and craft. They make a range of papers including very nice craft papers for paper crafts, gift paper for cards and wrapping, and Japanese papers suitable for oil paintings. The sketches in the sketchbook include my original artwork, images I've found on the web, and images from films and music. My drawings and paintings have a real Japanese aesthetic to them. I'm interested in manga, and find that many of the popular Japanese cartoon characters are much more beautiful than their Western counterparts, especially the eyes. I like to portray this influence in my own work. I've been reading and enjoying the Manga series "Rurouni Kenshin" by Nobuhiro Watsuki. In Japan, it is popular to get your picture drawn in manga format. I enjoy going to the picture shop to buy a Manga book and getting my picture drawn, then hanging it up somewhere to show friends and family. I took the A3 sketchbook along with me, and have been drawing and making notes. It's a great way to practise and get your drawings on paper!
