over plans to cut hundreds of millions of dollars in federal funding. But even if the system wins, the impact will likely be limited, because the budget fight over tax reform and health care will still be raging in Washington. "The money being talked about is minuscule," said Tod Story, an Oregon Community College System spokesman. "Where those dollars are going to be most needed is in 2017, 2018, 2019." You've heard it before. That's what they all say. It's no different for the Oregon Community College System. But ask them again next year. The news might be different. We asked for an update on where the Oregon Community College System sees its federal funding. Where will the federal funds go? We asked for an update on where the Oregon Community College System sees its federal funding. We asked the vice president of finance, business services and operations to figure that out. Here's what we found.

Over the past two years, the Oregon Community College System's federal budget has grown from about $200
