Q: F# string/char array concatenation I found this question here: F# string concatenation of arrays? But the answer was not clear to me. I'd like to understand the explanation of @StephenC.Lott `string[] delimitedArray = new string[] { "My", "e", "Array", ":", "Hello", "World" }; string result = string.Concat(delimitedArray); var sb = new StringBuilder(result); foreach (string c in delimitedArray) sb.Append(c); return sb.ToString();` For the concatenation of the string array with the delimiter, which is `string result = string.Concat(delimitedArray);` This is the explanation that I don't understand: `string result = string.Concat(delimitedArray);` In C#, it would be `var result = string.Concat(delimitedArray.ToArray());` When using the `.ToArray()` method, the array is copied to a new array. So for the example above `var sb = new StringBuilder(result); foreach (string c in delimitedArray) sb.Append(c);` Would be the equivalent to `var sb = new StringBuilder(string.Concat(delimitedArray)); foreach (string c in delimitedArray) sb.Append(c);` I don't understand why there is a difference. Is there a practical difference? A: You can imagine (in C#) what `string.Concat(delimitedArray)` does: It grabs the contents of the first array, and then copies them to the output string. If the `delimitedArray` were also an array, it would behave like this: `// In C# (IDispatch strings) string result =`
