One of the bigger debates over a lot of PC performance is the Wi-Fi card it needs. I've been traveling around testing PCs recently to see what graphics cards each system required, and I've noticed a common trend. Which brands will work best on which systems? For this article we'll be looking at Asus, Dell, EVGA and Gigabyte for their high-end cards, and MSI, NVIDIA and Biostar for their mid-range cards. "Why would you buy a card that doesn't work?" That's the question most people who buy mid-range cards have. All of these cards should work fine on any system that's more than a few years old. I know plenty of people who are still using their original laptop cards. However, on the desktop PC side, one of the biggest gripes I see when it comes to Wi-Fi is the lack of driver support.
