The U.S. government is warning Canada against adopting a new missile defense system meant to defend against ballistic missiles launched from North Korea.

Officials in the U.S. Department of State and Department of Defense sent a letter last week to Canada's defense minister, stating that the new missile-defense system being deployed in Canada had "expanded" the threat posed by North Korea. U.S. officials said Tuesday the system is called the Terminal High-Altitude Area Defense system or THAAD. U.S. and South Korean government officials have repeatedly warned that North Korea could test launch a ballistic missile this year to celebrate the birthday of its late founder, Kim Il-sung. The system was deployed earlier this month after an agreement was signed between Washington and Seoul. In a statement Tuesday, the Department of State reiterated the U.S.'s position that it would oppose the installation of the THAAD system in Canada, despite the fact that the government has been trying to obtain a U.S. permit to provide technical support. Canada has been trying to finalize a deal with the U.S. for its new missile-defense system. The U.S. has had the system in South Korea since the early 2000s. "We continue to believe that the THAAD missile system, once operational, will not contribute to or support efforts to manage or resolve the threat posed by North Korea's advancing nuclear weapons and ballistic missile program," said Global
