Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an exposure control device, and more particularly, to an exposure control device for use in an image-pickup device such as a digital camera or video camera. 2. Description of the Related Art Image-pickup devices such as digital cameras and video cameras often include an exposure control device for controlling exposure and an auto focus (AF) device for automatically setting an in-focus state. As one of the exposure control devices for performing auto exposure (hereinafter referred to as "AE"), there is a technique for calculating a value of exposure from a number of consecutive captured images, selecting, from the number of consecutive captured images, a number of consecutive images of a predetermined range of brightness or darker than a predetermined brightness, and controlling an aperture based on the selected number of consecutive images (see Unexamined Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2003-176697). FIG. 11 is a block diagram illustrating a control circuit of an exposure control device according to the related art. The control circuit generates a peak signal when peak brightness is detected from an output of an image sensor, so as to obtain exposure information. The control circuit then calculates a peak of brightness value from the obtained exposure information, and calculates, from the calculated peak value, exposure information including a shutter speed, an aperture number, an ISO sensitivity, an exposure correction value, and an exposure level. The control circuit then calculates a shutter speed for raising the exposure level to a predetermined level, an aperture number for extending the shutter speed, and an ISO sensitivity for lowering the exposure to an appropriate level in accordance with the exposure information calculated from the peak value. The control circuit then controls the camera to perform the exposure. However, the related-art control device described above performs an AE control in which the control circuit for calculating the peak from the output of the image sensor is needed, as well as an AE control in which no peak is obtained and an AE control in which the shutter speed is extended to raise the exposure level to the predetermined level. Thus, in the related-art exposure control device, an aperture setting, an ISO sensitivity setting, and an exposure compensation need to be executed in two steps, resulting section I'm working on a "customer migration" using the CustomerImport process. The problem I'm having is that my company's brand is "AAAA", and the dataflow lets me create them as an attribute. But it comes up blank in the import tab, like so: So the question is: how do I make it so that I can create an attribute in the product import (from a CSV)? I'm doing all this in Magento 6d1f23a050
