They are activated directly by ligand-receptor interaction, such as glutamate receptors and by mechanical stimulation. They are generally excitatory or inhibitory, depending on the cell type. Release of neurotransmitter from cells Ion channel-only channels are required for release of neurotransmitters into the synaptic cleft. They do not require protein kinase C (PKC) to be activated by phospholipase C (PLC), so they are not generated by any of the receptors that generate PLC. Release of neurotransmitters from neurons Ion channels-only channels are also present in neurons. They have been found in the outer membrane of neurons and they are involved in neurotransmitter release. Although the exact mechanism is unknown, they act as a calcium-permeable channel. They are activated by a protein called CASQ, which like VGCCs are calcium channels. Ion channel-only channels are permeable to sodium, calcium, and chloride and can be distinguished from voltage-dependent calcium channel types on the basis of conductance properties. These channels are different from VGCCs, which are activated by phospholipase C (PLC) second messengers produced by G protein-coupled receptors. How did a top-level civil rights issue-LGBT rights—which started out as a ‘gay’ issue—become so tied up with the ‘cultural war’ between liberals and conservatives and the conservative Christian evangelicals that have been smoldering in the US since its founding?
