This is another indication that the conformational switching, caused by an abrupt change in temperature, is much more significant and rapid in the nanostructured block copolymer than in the corresponding bulk material. !Temperature-dependent intensity change Δ^* obtained from temperature-dependent IR spectra of a poly(epsilon-caprolactone) (PCL~20~)-b-poly(epsilon-caprolactone) (PCL~20~-b-PCL~100~) copolymer aqueous solution.{#fig3} 3. Conclusions {#sec3} ===== By the presence of the amide linkages in the main chain of PCL, an alternating poly(epsilon-caprolactone) and poly(epsilon-caprolactone)-b-poly(epsilon-caprolactone) copolymer has been synthesized by ring opening polymerization of epsilon-caprolactone in the presence of PCL. The PCL-b-PCL block copolymer has its melting point raised by ca. 15 °C due to the solid-liquid crystalline transition. Molecular orientation of PCL-b-PCL copolymer is more significant, as the maximum melting point of PTCEL-b-PCL is in
