Simmons is known for his acerbic wit on the big screen, and he's taken those caustic quips to Twitter over the years to keep himself in the loop. But it seems the actor is not a fan of President-elect Donald Trump's press coverage, and he's taken his criticism on Twitter over the past few weeks. "Not fair, and certainly not accurate," Simmons wrote in response to a USA Today article about Trump's ties to Russian billionaire Oleg Deripaska, referring to the media coverage. Not fair, and certainly not accurate. — jk simmons (@TheJKSimmons) December 28, 2016 But it seems Simmons is also targeting articles by USA Today writers because he was particularly irked by a recent piece about dogs named after Trump and his son Barron. According to the article, President-elect Donald Trump named his son Barron as the dog's owner, allowing the dog to be spoiled by Trump's many children. "They sure do. While the president's grandkids are dog-napping criminals, Trump, this dog is being spoiled beyond imagining," Simmons tweeted. Simmons isn't the only celebrity to take a swipe at the coverage of Trump's presidency. Stars like Matt Damon, Russell Crowe, and Chris Evans have all said they weren't following the election closely, and the election is what caused Jack Nicholson's wife, Diane Keaton, to back out of attending the Inauguration. Trump has struggled to get the media to agree that the billionaire should be called the Republican nominee.
