archicad is based on the gdl (graphical data language) technology which is composed of a set of elements, namely nodes, connections, views, attributes and direct constraints. the editor allows the creation of new diagrams, views and nodes. for instance, a new node can be added to the diagram. this can be done by selecting the "node" from the "edit" menu. in the dialog box, entering the name of the node and placing it on the chosen position is done. the nodes can be placed by clicking on the desired spot. they can also be dragged around. moving objects from one view to another is possible by copying and pasting. this company was founded in 1999 as a software development studio. their software allows architects, engineers and construction workers to effectively produce, document and project digitally using autodesk software. in 2005, this company was awarded for its high-tech portfolio of software products. now their products are for the professional and the industry. this is the reason why they have the model generation and automation (mga) suite. this suite is a professional level 3d computer modeler and provides the easiest way to create and manage 3d models on a variety of platforms. it is an overall solution that works around the project and allows users to concentrate on their work. we were pretty impressed by the performance of the software, it was really fast compared to most of the programs we used to use. the toolbox allowed to install many components at a time with a single click and all the data was beautifully organized. the interface was very intuitive and it was easy to create 3d models. but unlike most of the programs out there, our experience in the use of this software was limited to one virtual project, using a single set of components. the project was quite simple and it consisted only of two drawings, a template and a floor plan.
