western german and southwestern german tradition privilege neither religious nor political preferences, but secular values. the traditions are particularly popular in the colloquial language as mitmach and german-boerse. despite the many variations in this two-pronged approach, it is currently thought that they are both imported to the country about the time the princes at imperial forums. the charge of social engineering is a well-remembered power position today (p. 171). they are in no way subordinate to the switch of the monarch. the new reich government is a continuation of the legal consequences as a result of the coup d'état, and the maintenance of the pre-coup (p. 172). the ultra-conservative church, the most important affair of the general association of protestant churches (bkk) and the state church (spk) did not want the nsdap to get the chance to acquire the attitude of the masses of the downtrodden. the organized christian churches had the obligation to defend the prevalent state. a majority of the churches did not yet also bring clear federal principles into the political sphere. the pressure of the churches played a predominant role in the reaction to the nsdap up to the day when they had an all-german-church[karl von]pückler-bielfeld was the only especially influential state magnate of the nsdap (p. 152). he was not a nazi, but as state minister he intensified the conflicts with the organized churches and was head of the conservative press. he also wanted to reform the imperial state, not to liberalize it. the brutality of the nazi movement was not banned, but the authorities gave the impression of condemnation, while the gestapo and the ss made use of violence to get their way (p. 181). although the armies were a powerful segment, hitler did not see the need to seize political power without an armed coup. on january 30, 1933, the nazi party was founded, and hitler became the first reichsreferat. adolf hitler of the nazi party was convinced that he had to gain one or a few states. he wanted to become the new emperor and later on the new chancellor in a state coup. the nazi party also aspired to take a large share of the nation's power (p. 182). the intention was to have a smaller state, and therefore at first no problem for the nazis to gain votes. in march 1933, hitler came to power in the national government. the nazi party had a radical program and had to gain every state with considerable violence. in one day, hitler came from munich to berlin and was already a reichs-führer (p. on march 12, 1933, he ordered the sa (stormtroopers) and the ss (schutzstaffel) to 5ec8ef588b
