the aim of this study was to evaluate the effects of different opacifiers on the translucency of experimental dental composite-resins. three metal oxides that are used as opacifiers were tested in this study: titanium oxide ( $\text{TiO}_2$ ), aluminium oxide ( $\text{Al}_2\text{O}_3$ ) and zirconium oxide ( $\text{ZrO}_2$ ). experimental composite-resins were fabricated containing 25wt.% urethane dimethacrylate (udma)-based resin matrix and 75% total filler including different concentrations of metal oxides (0, 0.25, 0.5, 0.75 and 1wt.%) blended into silane treated barium-silicate filler. the specimens (15.5mm diameter and 1mm thickness) were light-cured and tested in the transmittance mode using a uv/vis spectrophotometer at wavelengths from 380 to 700nm under a standard illuminant d65. the color differences ( $e^* ab$ ) between different concentrations of opacifiers were also measured in transmittance mode based on their lab values. statistical analysis by anova and tukey's test showed a significant decrease (p
